

American history right in front of you!

The idea came from President Lyndon B. Johnson, who advocated for rural electrification and youth development. In 1957, when he was still a U.S. senator, Johnson suggested "sending youngsters to the nation's capital where they can see what the flag stands for and represents."

This notion evolved into a nationwide effort to send youth on an organized, fun educational trip in the 1960s. Now, over 50 years later, electric cooperatives from across the country send 1,800 youth to the nation's capital every summer.

About my trip

"Wow. That was my first reaction as the bus pulled into the city. In fact, that was my reaction about the whole trip. In D.C., we got to see just about everything. From Capitol Hill, to the Lincoln memorial, to Arlington National Cemetery, to the Smithsonians, the Pentagon and even Mount Vernon. Every time we arrived at a new destination I was in awe and overwhelmed with emotion. Our schedule was jam packed. Our days started at about 7 a.m. and didn't end until 11 p.m. or later each day. To say the least, I was tired."

"This trip has taught me the importance of our history and honoring the things our country has gone through to get to where we are today. I have learned Washington D.C. in fact isn't all about politics and people arguing. It is about who we are as a country and it is a stance of strength. My trip has affected me in the most positive way. It has reminded me of the endless possibilities our country has to offer, but it has more than anything made me proud to be an American."
